"A CAREFUL survey of a series of the MONUMENTAL BRASSES of this country, would enable one to follow the gradual changes of manners and habits, to track the prominent feelings, and even to detect the religious emotions, peculiar to each age : for, not only the figure, its attitude, and costume, but the inscription, and the subordinate parts of the design, all conspire to furnish a lively picture of the individual and his times."—Oxford Manual of Monumental Brasses.

"BRASSES, equally devotional in style and character" with more costly sculptured effigies, recumbent upon altar-tombs, "occupied no portion of the church that could be required for more important purposes ; their position for the most part was on the floor, which they richly adorned, and it was also the best that could be adopted for commemorating the departed, and at the same time bringing practically before the minds of the living the stern lesson, 'Memento homo quia pulvis es, et in pulverem reverteris.'"—Messrs. Waller.

PREFACE.

The almost exclusively national character of Monumental Brasses in England, and the general recognition of their high value and interest, appeared to require the production of some work which would comprise a numerous and diversified series of examples of these memorials, and which, at the same time, from its moderate cost, might be available to every class of archæological enquirers. Such is the design of the present publication.

In selecting the contents for this volume, those Brasses have been preferred which are most meritorious, and possess the greatest general interest; particularly such specimens as have recently been discovered by the removal of pews, or which have not hitherto been figured, or of which engravings are to be found only in works not generally accessible. In many instances, several Brasses have been given, selected indeed from various parts of the kingdom, but which are all of the same period, and which all exemplify costume or armour of the same style and general character: this has been done in order to afford the opportunity for that careful comparison of cotemporary examples, which is so necessary to establish the full value of these memorials as connected with the history of medieval art.

The details of the canopies have, in some of the more elaborate Brasses, been shewn by separate engravings. In like manner, the effigies have been sometimes represented apart from the remainder of the original composition, that thus their respective peculiarities in costume and armour might be the better distinguished. Where canopies and other accessories have been very much mutilated, the few remaining fragments have been omitted, or partial restorations have been introduced, from a desire to convey more satisfactorily the effect of the original design[a]; and, on the other hand, in the case of a few specimens of unusually large dimensions, portions only of the original Brasses have been engraved.

The engravings themselves have in all cases been drawn from careful rubbings of the original Brasses; and every precaution has been taken to preserve in them the general character of the originals, and also to represent even the smallest details with scrupulous fidelity and exactness; still, it is but too probable that many errors and imperfections may be detected, which have escaped the notice of the author.

In the descriptive portion of the work, it has been considered advisable to adopt the utmost possible conciseness.

[a] These restorations have always been drawn from the remaining fragments themselves, or from the indents of the lost portions in the slabs. In the engravings they are expressed by faint lines.

Accordingly, at the foot of the several engravings, there has been placed a brief statement of the date, or the supposed date, of each brass; of its measurements and present position; its shields of arms, and also any mutilations which the original may have suffered, and any omissions or restorations in the engraving. To this has been added a classification of the examples with some occasional remarks upon them, and references for more full and complete descriptions of armour, costume, &c., to the author's other volume, entitled, "Monumental Brasses and Slabs," to Part X. of the Messrs. Waller's splendid work, and to the Oxford Manual of Brasses. There will also be found an index of names, places, and heraldry, and a general chronological index.

This volume is thus complete in itself, but the author hopes that he may be enabled hereafter to extend the series beyond one volume.

It would have been scarcely possible for a person entirely free from any professional occupation, to have obtained materials for this work without considerable assistance: such assistance has been the more required by one, who is able to devote to archæology but occasional hours of leisure from other and far more serious engagements. In proportion, however, to his greater need, the author has experienced an amount of co-operation, such as he feels altogether unable suitably to acknowledge. To the many friends from whom he has derived assistance, in itself most valuable, and invariably rendered with ready and most gratifying kindness, the author would record his thanks; and in so doing, he is bound to express his special obligation to Augustus W. Franks, Esq., Rev. W. C. Lukis, Rev. C. R. Manning, Rev. W. Drake, J. Hewitt, Esq., Philip Pritchard, Esq., Rev. J. R. Major, Rev. T. Ellacombe, Mr. Richardson of Greenwich, Rev. J. M. Gresley, the Ven. Archdeacon Wilberforce, Albert Way, Esq., Sir H. Ellis, W. Carpenter, Esq., J. Hewett, Esq., G. P. R. Minty, Esq., George J. Hill, Esq., Raphael Brandon, Esq., Rev. H. Addington, Rev. S. Wilton, G. G. Francis, Esq., J. Beecham, Esq., Rev. G. R. Boissier, H. Haines, Esq., A. Nesbitt, Esq., Rev. E. Franks Hodgson, Rev. C. Gaunt, Rev. J. F. Lee, Rev. J. Hamilton, W. Blaauw, Esq., Rev. C. E. Kennaway, R. Davies, Esq., C. Griffiths, Esq., Edward King, Esq., and R. J. Withers, Esq.

To Mr. R. B. Utting also, by whom all the engravings contained in this volume have been executed from his own drawings on the wood, the author wishes to record his obligation for his uniform attention, care, and punctuality: to his talent and skill as an artist, Mr. Utting can desire no other testimony than that afforded by his engravings themselves.

THE ENGRAVINGS CONTAINED IN THIS VOLUME.

BRASSES OF ECCLESIASTICS.

BRASSES OF ARCHBISHOPS, BISHOPS, AND ABBOTS.

From this most important class of brasses, there are here figured the memorials of

A.D.

1417. Thomas Cranley, archbishop of Dublin, and warden of New College, Oxford; in New College chapel.

1526. John Yong, titular bishop of Callipolis, a city of Thrace, and warden of New College; also in the chapel of that society; and of 1554. Thomas Goodrich, bishop of Ely; in the south aisle of the choir of Ely cathedral.

To these has been added a fragment of a Flemish brass, the memorial of some bishop or abbot, now in private possession, which may be assigned to about A.D. 1375.

The effigy only of Archbishop Cranley has been here engraved, with the view to render, to as large a scale as possible, this admirable example of the vestments and official insignia of the hierarchy of the period. The original brass comprehended a canopy; an epitaph in eight lines of rhyming Latin, at the base of the composition; a commemorative inscription on a border-fillet; and two shields of arms, one on either side of the head of the effigy. The greater part of the border-fillet is now lost: but in all other respects, with the exception of a few small fragments, this brass is still perfect. The canopy, which rises above the figure from bold shafts, is triple, and is itself surmounted by a square embattled head-canopy, having circles of rich tracery in the spandrels formed by a plain arch. It will be observed that the archiepiscopal crozier is here a crucifix. This brass has been engraved entire by the Messrs. Waller.

The shields bear on the fesse point a leopard's face, between three ducal crowns, two and one.

The epitaph is as follows :—

INCEDENS SISTE—LOCUS ASPICE QUID TENET ISTE—PONTIFICIS G̃TŪ—DEUELYN COR̃P. TUMULATUM—TN̄SFUGA QŪA CERNIS—DN̄ VITA VICES VARIAUIT—MORS CARNIS VIUIS—SUB HUMO LECTŪ SIBI STŪIT—
ANNIS BIS DENIS—PĀT. ALM̃. ALŪPN'. EGENIS—SEDIT SAC̃TUS—FUNGENS VICE PONTIFICATUS—
SPIRIT̃. ERIPIT̃.—NŌ ARTE VALENS REUOCARI—QUESO PIIS PRECIBS̃—SIBI VR̃IS AUXILIARI.

Of the inscription on the border-fillet, there remain but these words[a],—

RUIT ISTE PATER ALDELMI FESTO. CURSU
MIGRAUIT HONESTO. QUI CIRCŪSTATIS.

From the brass of Bishop Yong, the head of the effigy and also the head of the pastoral staff have been broken away. The inscription, which is in raised letters, yet remains, having its dates not filled up. In this example the maniple is omitted: the chesuble is richly jewelled, and has a central apparel resembling a pall: the dalmatic is covered with embroidery: and rings are represented, as worn on every finger of both hands, over the gloves.

In the brass to Bishop Goodrich, the effigy was originally placed beneath a single canopy: but this canopy, with four shields, a foot-legend, three small scrolls, and about half of the border-fillet with its inscription, and two angle-emblems, are now lost. The effigy itself is almost perfect; it represents the prelate in his full episcopal vestments, as he wore them after the Reformation: he holds in his right hand a bible; and having been appointed Lord Chancellor A.D. 1551, he also holds the Great Seal.

[a] This inscription is given entire in Wood's Collections, p. 201. See also the Oxford Manual of Brasses, p. 7.

Three small scrolls yet remain upon the slab to which this brass is affixed; they severally bear the words, SI DEVS—CONTRA—GOODRYKE.

The evangelistic emblems in this example are placed within large roses: but of these two only are preserved[b].

There remain of the inscription on the border-fillet, the following words only:—

....FORIS ENĪ APUD EXTEROS PRĪCEPES SEPE LEGATUS DOMI QUIDEM CUM REGI EDWARDO EIUS NŌIS SEXTO ALIQUĀDIU CONSILIARIUS EXTITISSET. MAGNUS TANDEM ANGLIE FACTUS CANCELLARIUS CHARIOR NE PRINCIPI PROPTER SINGULARĒ PRUDENCIĀ AN AMABILIOR PP̄LO PROPTER INTEGRITATĒ ET ABSTINENTIĀ FUERIT AD INDICANDŪ EST PERQ̄. DIFFICILE. OBIIT X° DIE MAIJ....

The Flemish fragment, evidently the work of the same great artist with the brass of Abbot Delamere, may probably have formed a part of the now lost memorial of another head of the abbey of St. Alban, whose despoiled slab lies in the choir of the abbey church. As a work of art, this fragment may, perhaps, be regarded as the very finest specimen of this class of monument known to be in existence[c].

For a description and further illustration of the vestments, &c., which are represented in these brasses, see Monumental Brasses and Slabs, pp. 96—103. See also Messrs. Waller's Brasses, part X.; and the Oxford Manual of Brasses, pp. xxiii.—xxxi.

BRASSES OF ECCLESIASTICS HABITED IN THE CHESUBLE, &c.

A.D.

c. 1330. John de Grofhurst, Horsemonden church, Kent. This brass is probably the work of a French artist. The chesuble is here ornamented about its border, and has a central pall-shaped apparel; and the sleeve-apparels of the alb encircle the wrists. This latter arrangement is also exemplified in the brasses to Nichol de Gore, and Thomas de Hop, (both figured in this volume;) to three other priests, at Wensley in Yorkshire, Mimms in Herts., and Oulton in Suffolk, (all figured in Monumental Brasses and Slabs;) and in two semi-effigial brasses, in Merton chapel, Oxford, and at Brington in Northamptonshire, (both figured in Christian Monuments in England and Wales, section 11.)

1375. Peter de Lacy, Northfleet church, Kent. The following words only remain of the border legend to this fine brass.

LACY QVONDĀ . RECTOR . ISTIVS . ECCLIĒ . ET . PREBENDARIVS . P'BENDE . DE . SWERDE . . . . . CATHEDRAL . DVB. . . .

c. 1360. Esmound de Burnedissh, Brundish church, Suffolk.

c. 1375. An ecclesiastic, Stoke-in-Teignhead church, Devon.

c. 1380. An ecclesiastic, Beachamwell church, Norfolk.

1389. Richard Thaseburgh, Hellesdon church, Norfolk.

The three brasses last named have been, through a mistake, engraved to too small a scale.

1432. William Byschopton, Great Bromley church, Essex.

The same,—shewing the effigy only to a larger scale. This beautiful specimen, with the brasses at Broadwater and Royston, (both engraved in this volume,) form a series of cotemporary memorials of ecclesiastics, severally habited in the chesuble, the cope, and in academic costume.

c. 1450. An ecclesiastic, Monkton church, Kent.

A very fine example of the period.

A.D.

1469. John Swetecok, Lingfield church, Surrey.
The name is omitted at the foot of the engraving.

1552. Edmund Asseton, Middleton church, Lancashire.
The effigy is here represented as holding a chalice, with the sacramental wafer. The legend has, in addition to the date, the dominical letter of the year.

SEMI-EFFIGIES OF ECCLESIASTICS HABITED IN THE CHESUBLE, &c.

A.D.

c. 1320. Thomas de Hop, Kemsing church, Kent.
This is, probably, the earliest example of an ecclesiastical semi-effigy in brass. The sleeve-apparels of the alb are here continued round the wrists, and the chesuble has an ornamented border.

c. 1350. Semi-effigy of an ecclesiastic, Wantage church, Berkshire.

c. 1370. Walter Frilende, Oakham church, Surrey. This brass appears to be the work of a foreign artist. The chesuble has a pall-shaped apparel, and its border is slightly ornamented.

c. 1370. John Alderburne, Lewknor church, Oxfordshire. The singular device, known as the fylfot cross[d], is the sole ornament of the apparels of the amice and alb in this example: the same device also appears in the last named brass, and in several other specimens which are figured in this volume.

For a description and further illustration of the chesuble and other vestments, which are represented in these brasses, see Monumental Brasses and Slabs, pp. 95—98. See also Waller's Brasses, part X.; and the Oxford Manual, pp. 23—27.

BRASSES OF ECCLESIASTICS HABITED IN THE COPE, &c.

A.D.

c. 1360. William de Fulburne, Fulbourn church, Cambridgeshire. This may be regarded as the earliest known example of a coped brass. It is of very large dimensions, having above the effigy a lofty single canopy. Of the border legend there remain only the words following:—

✠ HIC . IACET . DOMINVS . WILLMVS . DE . FVLBVRNE . QVONDAM . CANONICVS . ECCLESIAE . SCI . PAVLI . LONDON . . . .

At the feet of the effigy are the lines,

VERMIBS . HIC . DONOR—ET . SIC . OSTENDERE . CONOR . QVD . SICVD . HIC . PONOR—PONIT . OMNIS . HONOR.

Two shields of arms are lost. The morse of the cope is charged with armorial insignia,—a saltire, between four martlets: and the initial letters, W. F., appear in the apparels of the cope.

c. 1365. An ecclesiastic, Watton church, Herts.

1382. John de Campeden, St. Cross, Winchester. The ecclesiastic commemorated by this noble brass, enjoyed the intimate friendship of William de Wyckham, the illustrious bishop of Winchester.

1436. William Prestwyk, dean of Battle, Warbleton church, Sussex. Three plates are here given of this truly splendid brass, with a view to render the details of both the effigy and the canopy to as large a scale as possible, and also to shew the general effect of the entire composition. The apparel of the cope is embroidered with the text, "Credo, quod Redemptor meus vivit," &c., the word "Credo" being placed upon the morse. The finial of the canopy is formed by a figure of the pelican in her piety, with a scroll bearing the truly appropriate legend, SIC . CHRISTVS . DILEXIT . NOS.

1432. John Mapilton, Broadwater church, Sussex. In this example the morse of the cope is ensigned with the sacred monogram I H C, and the apparels of the vestment are embroidered with the initial M, a maple leaf, and a rose, in alternate circles and lozenges.

1435. Henry Martin, Upwell church, Norfolk. The cope is here represented as being worn with the amice and alb, and it displays the adjustment of the stole[e]. This brass has been, by mistake, engraved to too small a scale.

c. 1460. Richard Wylleys, Higham Ferrers church, Northamptonshire. The morse and apparels of the cope are here ornamented with jewels, or with embroidery to represent jewels.

1471. Doctor Henry Sever, Merton College chapel, Oxford. This fine brass exemplifies the practice of embroidering the apparels of the cope with tabernacle-work and figures of saints: the figures represent, on the right side of the effigy, (1.) some bishop, (2.) St. James, (3.) St. James the Less, (4.) St. Paul; and on the left side, (1.) St. John Baptist, (2.) St. Matthew, (3.) St. Bartholomew, (4.) St. Thomas. Parts only of two compartments of a rich triple canopy remain above the head of the effigy, in the original brass.

c. 1515. An ecclesiastic, probably Dr. Robert Langton, Queen's College, Oxford[f]. In this example the entire surface of the cope is covered with a rich embroidery of lozenge-work, each lozenge being charged with a fleur-de-lys. The morse bears a rose en soleil. Another brass, closely [e] See Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 98. In the engraving, this brass is incorrectly assigned to the reign of Henry IV.: it should be to the reign of Henry VI.

A.D.

resembling this in design, but of inferior execution, is preserved at Dowdeswell, in Gloucestershire.

1505. John Stodeley, Over Winchendon church, Buckinghamshire. The cope in this example has its hood attached to it: possibly, however, the outer vestment here represented may be a monk's cloak. The original is inlaid with lead, where the white under-vestment appears[g].

SEMI-EFFIGY IN A COPE, &c.

1465. Thomas Cod, vicar, St. Margaret's church, Rochester. The original brass becoming loose, it was discovered that the plate was engraved on both sides: in the accompanying figure the two designs are represented. The amice appears in one design, the aumuce in the other[h].

BRASS OF AN ECCLESIASTIC IN ACADEMIC HABIT.

1432. William Tabram, Royston church, Herts. The lower part of this effigy, which is lost in the original, has been restored, after a careful comparison with several cotemporary specimens of similar character.

SEMI-EFFIGIES OF ECCLESIASTICS IN ACADEMIC HABIT.

1361. John Hotham, Chinnor church, Oxfordshire.

1418. William Tannere, Cobham church, Kent.

For a description of the cope, &c., represented in these brasses, see Monumental Brasses and Slabs, p. 103. See also Waller's Brasses, part X.; and the Oxford Manual, pp. xxxi.—xxxvii.

CROSSES AND BRACKET BRASSES, HAVING EFFIGIES OR PARTS OF EFFIGIES OF ECCLESIASTICS.

A.D.

c. 1320. Nichol de Gore, Woodchurch church, Kent. The effigy is here habited in the chesuble.

c. 1330. Floriated cross, with the head of an ecclesiastic, Chinnor church, Oxfordshire. The collar of the amice is the only part of the costume which is introduced into this composition.

c. 1375. Floriated cross, with an effigy, Hereford cathedral. The cope is represented in this fine brass.

1408. John Lumbarde, Stone church, Kent. This is another example of an ecclesiastical effigy in the chesuble. The original brass had a shield of arms on either side of the shaft of the cross, and also a foot legend below its base.

c. 1420. Bracket brass to John Bloxham, and John Whytton, Merton College chapel, Oxford. The two effigies appear in academic habit[i].

c. 1420. Bracket brass to Reginald de Cobham, Cobham church, Kent. This effigy is habited in the cope. The shaft of the bracket, which originally bore an inscription, is now lost[k].

CROSS BRASSES WITHOUT ANY EFFIGY OR PART OF AN EFFIGY[l].

The usual arrangement in these brasses is to place a cross-head of four equal bars, (and thus itself forming a Greek cross,) upon a tall shaft with a base.

A.D.

1400. Cross to the memory of Thomas Chichele, and Agnes his wife, Higham Ferrers church, Northamptonshire. The cross-head is decorated with a flowing pattern: the four bars terminate in the evangelistic emblems; and at their intersection is the figure of our Lord. The emblem of St. Mark, which is lost in the original, is restored in the engraving: but through a mistake, this emblem has been placed at the extremity of the wrong arm of the cross. This is the memorial of the parents of Archbishop Chichele, the founder of All Souls' College, Oxford[m].

c. 1400. Head and base of a cross, Grainthorpe church, Lincolnshire. This beautiful cross is represented as fixed upon a rock rising out of the sea.

c. 1415. Cross to Roger Cheyne, Esquire, Cassington church, Oxfordshire[n].

1425. Cross to Margaret Oliver, Beddington church, Surrey. In the original of this simple memorial to the faithful servant of Nicholas Carew, the lower bar of the cross-head is lost.

MILITARY BRASSES.

MILITARY BRASSES.

BRASSES OF KNIGHTS AND OTHERS WEARING MIXED ARMOUR OF MAIL, PLATE, AND STUDDED CUIR-BOUILLI[a].

For a description of the armour, &c., represented in the following brasses, see Monumental Brasses and Slabs, pp. 45—53; and the Glossary appended to that volume. See also the Oxford Manual of Brasses, p. lxix.

A.D.

1347. Two compartments of the canopy, forming part of the brass to Sir Hugh Hastings, Elsyng church, Norfolk.

The canopy to this grand brass (which is apparently the work of a foreign artist) was originally composed of four of these compartments on either side, each uppermost one being surmounted by a smaller canopied figure and two pinnacles: of the compartments five only now remain. The finial of the main canopy, which originally supported a helmet and crest, is lost: the legs of the

[a] All the remaining brasses of knights in mail armour, and also the examples of mixed armour of earlier date than A.D. 1347, are figured in my Monumental Brasses and Slabs. Several of these fine brasses have also been admirably figured in the Messrs. Waller's work, and again in Stothard's Effigies. Other engravings of early military brasses will be found in sections ii. and iii. of my Christian Monuments in England and Wales.

A.D.

principal effigy, and various other fragments, have also been removed from the slab [b].

The two compartments here figured severally represent, beneath the most elegant tabernacle-work and upon rich diapers, the effigies of Henry Plantagenet, earl of Lancaster, and Ralph Stafford, Lord Stafford.

c. 1360. Sir John Argentine (?), Horseheath church, Cambridgeshire. This is a very fine effigy: and the despoiled stone evidently shews that its canopy was equally good; but this is now entirely lost, with the sole exception of a small figure of an angel, which is represented as issuing from a cloud and holding the tilting-helmet of the knight.

c. 1365. Sir John Raven (?), Great Berkhampstead church, Hertfordshire. The camail, in this and the two following brasses, is of banded mail.

1367. Sir Thomas de Cobham, Cobham church, Kent.

1368. Sir Thomas Cheyne, Drayton Beauchamp church, Buckinghamshire.

BRASSES OF KNIGHTS AND OTHERS IN MIXED ARMOUR OF MAIL AND PLATE: ALSO OF LADIES [c].

c. 1370. Sir John de la Pole and Joan Cobham his wife, Chrishall church, Essex. Above the effigies, which have their hands joined, rises a triple canopy [d]. (See Frontispiece.)

c. 1380. Knight and lady [e], (unknown,) Broughton church, Lincolnshire. These effigies were also originally placed beneath a triple canopy, of which now but a fragment remains.

[b] There remains in the British Museum a very valuable impression of the Hastings brass, taken before it had suffered much injury. A most important collection of drawings of this brass, with MS. notes, is also in the possession of a distinguished antiquary, a friend of the author of this volume. Waller, Carter, and Cotman, have given engravings of parts of this brass. See also Christian Monuments in England and Wales, sections iii. iv.; and Monumental Brasses and Slabs, p. 45.

[c] See Monumental Brasses and Slabs, pp. 54—58.

[e] See Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 83.

A.D.

c. 1380. A knight, probably a Cobham, Cliffe Pypard church, Wiltshire[g].

c. 1385. John Cray, Esquire, Chinnor church, Oxfordshire. Both the sword and the misericorde are, in this example, adjusted after a fashion but rarely represented in brasses of this class and period. Of the original inscription a part only remains: CRAY . ARMIGER . DN̄I . REGIS . RICH̄I . 2D̄I. QUI . OBIIT.

1387. Sir Robert de Grey, of Rotherfield, Rotherfield Grey's church, Oxfordshire.

1387. Sir William de Etchingham, Etchingham church, Sussex. An inscription in the church records the knight, who is commemorated by this fine brass, to have been a munificent benefactor to the sacred edifice.

1393. Sir Henry English and Margaret his wife, Wood Ditton church, Cambridgeshire.

1395. Sir William de Bryene, Seal church, Kent. This is the first example in the present series of brasses in which the effigy of the deceased knight is represented with the head resting on the tilting-helmet with its crest and mantling, as on a pillow. The crest is a bugle-horn on a chapeau.

[f] See Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 85.

[g] This knight is probably the grandson to Henry Cobham, of Cobham, who was summoned to parliament in the fourth of Edward III. See Harl. MSS. 1233.

A.D.

The two shields bear Bryene or Bryan; and the same impaling quarterly, 1 and 4, a lion rampant, 2 and 3, fretty. This brass yet remains quite perfect.

c. 1395. Sir . . . Dalyngrugge and lady, Fletching church, Sussex. The jupon of the knight bears his arms, or, a cross engrailed, gules. The canopy has a central shaft, an uncommon arrangement. In all these brasses the laces of the camail are shewn on the bascinets.

1397. Sir John de Saint Quintin, and Lora his wife, Brandsburton church, Yorkshire. The plate-armour in this most interesting brass is elaborately enriched, and the belt is very splendid. The hauberk of mail is shewn with unusual distinctness. Unfortunately, in the original the head of the knight's effigy is lost. The lady wears a loose and flowing super-tunic, which envelopes the entire person: her head-gear is richly reticulated[h]. Of the original border-legend the following words only remain: NONAGESSIMO . DIE . MENSIS . JANUARII . ANNO . DN̄I . MILLIM̄O . CCC[i].

1398. Sir John Bettesthorne, Mere church, Wilts. In this fine effigy the bascinet is more acutely pointed than in the preceding examples, and the camail-laces are covered. The inscription is reversed[j].

c. 1380. Sir Edward Cerne and Elyne his wife, Draycot-Cerne church, Wilts. The lady here appears habited as a widow.

1394. Sir Richard Attelese and Dionisia his wife, Sheldwich church, Kent.

1389. Sir John Wingfield, Letheringham church, Suffolk. Upon this knight's jupon are emblazoned his arms,—argent on a bend, gules, between three cotises, sable, as many pairs of wings, joined in leure, of the field. This brass is now affixed to the wall, and its original inscription is lost: but Gough gives an inscription from a brass at Letheringham which probably belongs to this effigy: it is in these words:—HIC . IACET . DN̄S . JOHĒS . DE WYNGEFELD . MILES QUONDĀ . DN̄S . DE . LETHERINGH̄M. AN̄. . . . There is also in Gough an impression of a shield, bearing WINGFIELD impaling HASTINGS—Sir John having married Margaret, daughter of Sir Hugh Hastings. This Sir John Wingfield died 1389[k].

c. 1390. Sir Robert Russel, Strensham church, Worcestershire[l]. This brass and the three others last named appear to have been produced by the same artist[m].

1400. Sir George de Felbrigge, Playford church, Suffolk. The jupon is here charged with a lion rampant, for FELBRIGGE. Sir George was esquire at arms to King Edward III. A few words only of the original border-legend now remain; and these have between each word a letter M and a demi-rose conjoined[n].

1401. Sir Nicholas Dagworth, Blickling church, Norfolk. This noble brass exemplifies the practice of placing some ornamental device between each word of a border-legend, which first appears about the commencement of the fifteenth century. The jupon has its border deeply cut to [k] See Gough's Monuments, vol. ii. introduction, p. 27. See also the Oxford Manual, p. 51.

[l] In the chancel at Strensham there is also preserved the brass of Sir John Russel, father of this Sir Robert.

[m] There are several brasses which appear to have been also the work of this same artist: viz., the brasses of Robert Albyn and lady at Hemel Hempsted, Kent, c. A.D. 1400, (Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 57;) of Sir Reginald de Cobham, Lingfield, Surrey, A.D. 1403, (ibid., p. 60;) Sir John Wilcotes and lady, Great Tew, Oxon, A D. 1410, (engraved in this volume;) and of Thomas and Robert Freville, Esquires, both about A.D. 1405, at Little Shelford, in Cambridgeshire; (see a paper on the Freville family by A. W. Franks, Esq., published by the Cambridge Antiquarian Society.)

[n] This fine specimen, the next noble memorial figured in this volume, and the equally fine brasses to Sir John Bettesthorne at Mere, Wilts, and to Sir William and Lady Bagot, at Baginton, in Warwickshire, (figured in Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 56,) bear evident marks of having been produced by the same hand.

a leaf-like pattern. This Sir Nicholas Dagworth was a person of high eminence under King Edward III. and King Richard II.[o] 1401. Sir Morys Russel and Isabel his wife, Dyrham church, Gloucestershire.

1402. Sir William Ffienlez, Hurstmonceux church, Sussex.

1404. Knight and lady of the Stourton family, Sawtrey church, Huntingdonshire. On the knight's tilting-helmet is the singular crest of the Stourtons, the demi-figure of a monk in his cowl, grasping a flagellum of five lashes. The effigy of the knight bears a close resemblance to that of Sir Morys Russel. The costume of the lady is also the same with that worn by the Lady Isabel Russel, but the head-dress is different[p], and the head is represented as supported by two pillows. Of the original inscription to this brass the following words only remain, ... MENS̄ . APRILIS . ANO . DNĪ . MO . CCCCO . iiij . ET . MARIA . VX̄ . EIVS . QVOR..... AMĒ.

c. 1405. A knight, Laughton church, Lincolnshire. (Two plates.) This is one of the finest and most martial effigies of the period. The armour and accoutrements are all elaborately enriched. The transverse sword-belt here makes its first appearance in this series of military brasses: and it is worn with the broad hip-belt. The triple canopy is very splendid, and the vaulted soffits of its three arches are represented. The original inscriptions have been lost; and in their place a more recent legend has been substituted, which bears the names of William and George Dalison, Esquires, A.D. 1543, and 1549: hence it appears "that the Dalisons surreptitiously appropriated the tomb and effigy of some earlier knight to be their own memorial[q]."

c. 1405. Sir Thomas Massyngberd and lady, Gunby church, Lincolnshire. (Two plates.) This Sir Thomas Massyngberde lived at a period considerably later than the evident date of this fine brass, which bears his name.

The knight's effigy is very similar to the fine effigies of Sir Reginald Braybroke and Sir Nicholas Hawberke[r], at Cobham, in Kent. The hauberk and camail both have a border formed of small bunches of rings. The collar of SS. is worn by both the lady and the knight[s]. In one of the engravings the canopy is shewn in exactly its present state.

1408. Sir William de Tendering, Stoke-by-Nayland church, Suffolk[t].

SEMI-EFFIGY.

1405. Rauf de Cobham, Esquire, Cobham church, Kent. The legend, which is in Norman French, is here represented as if it were held by the effigy.

The seven brasses which next follow, exemplify the transition from the mixed armour of the camail period, to the adoption of complete armour of plate.

c. 1410. Knight and lady of the D'Eresby family, Spilsby church, Lincolnshire. (Two plates.) In this equally splendid and interesting brass, the knight wears upon his bascinet an orle of roses: his camail is partly covered by a gorget: the jupon is not worn, but above the waist appears the breast-plate, while the greater part of the skirt of the hauberk is covered by five taces: the epaulières, coudières and genouillières also, all indicate the progress to the adoption of unmixed plate-armour. The broad belt encircles the waist, instead of being adjusted about the hips: the sword is suspended from a second rich belt, which is girded transversely from the right side to the left: the weapon itself is very splendid: the small shield at the head of the scabbard bears a lion rampant[x]. The form and adjustment of the lady's costume is very curious: she wears a very rich reticulated head-dress. The figures are surmounted by a double triple-canopy.

1401. Sir Thomas Braunstone, Wisbeach church, Cambridgeshire. This brass is now so much worn that its elaborate enrichments can scarcely be distinguished. It exhibits the camail worn with the taces, and is in all respects a fine and valuable example.

1403. Sir John Hanley, and Joanna and Alice his wives, Dartmouth church, Devonshire. (Two plates.) The laces of the camail are here shewn: the breast-plate and taces are worn, the latter having apparently a fringe; the skirt of the hauberk is escaloped. The side-less cote-hardi is worn by both the ladies, with a close tunic[y].

c. 1410. Knight and lady, South Kelsey church, Lincolnshire. In this very curious specimen the camail is entirely covered; at the shoulders are palettes of singular form; the gauntlets and also belt are very peculiar, and the coudières are fan-shaped. The lady wears a loose and flowing mantle: the head-dress is the earliest form of that which is known as the mitred head-dress[z].

1410. Sir John Wylcotes and Alicia his wife, Great Tew church, Oxfordshire. (Two plates.) A gorget covers the greater part of the knight's camail: his head rests on his tilting-helmet, the upper part of which, with the crest, is now lost; and there are palettes to guard the shoulder-joints. In each spandrel of the fine double canopy appears a hand holding a scroll, with the motto, IN . ON . IS . AL . This same device and legend are repeated between each verse of the border-inscription.

1418. Sir Thomas de Saint Quintin, and Agnes his wife, Harpham church, Yorkshire. (Two plates.) In this brass the knight wears upon his bascinet an orle of a very singular character: his camail is entirely covered: he has roundels at the right shoulder and at both the elbow-joints, while at the left shoulder is a palette; his belt appears formed of open work. The lady wears a super-tunic of ample proportions, encircled at the waist by a very broad band; the cuffs are very large[a]. The shields of arms are SAINT QUINTIN and WARREN of Yorkshire.

1424. Robert Hayton, Esquire, Theddlethorpe church, Lincolnshire. This is the latest known example of the camail.

1414. Sir Ivo Fitzwaryn, Wantage church, Berkshire. In this example, as well as in some few others of rather later date, the border of a light hauberk, or perhaps of a skirt of mail, appears below the taces. This knight wears the hip-belt, and has roundels at the shoulders and at the elbow-joints.

1407—date of the brass, about 1415. Sir John Lysle, Thruxton church, Hampshire. (Three plates.) This fine brass must be considered to have been executed a few years subsequent to the decease of Sir John Lysle, who is here represented in a suit of unmixed plate-armour, as the steel panoply was first worn. The effigy is given to a larger scale than in the engraving of the entire composition; and a third plate of details is added.

1416. Sir Symon de Felbrigge, K.G., and Margaret his wife, Felbrigg church, Norfolk[b]. (Two plates.)

1417. Sir John Hadresham, Lingfield church, Surrey.

c. 1420. John Cressy, Esquire, and Cristina his wife, Dodford church, Northamptonshire[c].

1424. John Wantele, Amberley church, Sussex. In this example there appears a tabard worn over the armour: the sleeves are short, and they differ in form from those which were subsequently introduced: it will also be observed that here the heraldic insignia are not (as they afterwards were) repeated upon the sleeves.

[b] This brass is fully described at p. 62 of Monumental Brasses and Slabs.
[c] See Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 87; also p. 90.

c. 1425. Robert Lord Ferrers of Chartley, and Margaret his wife, Merevale abbey-church, Warwickshire. Another fine example of plate-armour of the simplest and most martial period. Above the tilting-helmet, which forms the knight's pillow, rises his crest, a plume of peacock's feathers. The baguette, a small appendage to the taces, is here shewn: this appears to have led to the introduction of tuilles. The costume of the lady closely resembles some other specimens already described.

c. 1425. Sir John Segrave (?), Dorchester abbey-church, Oxfordshire. The baguette is here much larger.

1426. Sir John de Brewys, Wiston church, Sussex. The position of the sword, in this fine and interesting brass, differs somewhat from the usual adjustment of that weapon. It will be seen that the slab is powdered with small scrolls, which bear alternately the words JESVS . MERCY. The six shields (of which one is lost from the original) are all charged with the arms of de Brewys [d].

1433. John Leventhorpe, Esquire, Sawbridgeworth church, Hertfordshire. Small taces attached by buckles to the lowermost tace, are apparent in this and in the next example. There is also in both an alteration in the form of the coudières. The collar is lost from the brass at Sawbridgeworth, but the original still shews traces of its having been a collar of SS [e].

c. 1435. Roger Elinebrigge, Esquire, Bedington church, Surrey. An important change in the gauntlets is here exemplified.

c. 1440. A knight or esquire of the Cuttes family, Arkesdon church, Essex. In this brass, and in the examples which follow next in succession, may be traced the gradual addition to the original suit of plate-armour, of various plates, for the purpose of additional protection.

c. 1440. Sir William Wadham, Ilminster church, Somersetshire[f].

1441. Sir Hugh Halsham, and Joice his wife, West Grinstead church, Sussex[g]. (Two plates.) The armour in this specimen is very plain, and without any of the additional plates in use at the period. The taces are nine in number. The effigy of Lady Halsham is singularly graceful and elegant. The original brass had a commemorative inscription on a border-fillet, but of this a few words only now remain: the complete legend was as follows:—

HIC JACET HUGO HALSHAM, MILES, QUI OBIIT ULTIMO DIE MENSIS FEBRUARIJ, ANŌ . DNĪ . MILLMŌ . CCCC . XXXXI . ET . DOMINA JOCOSA UX̄R EIUS QUE OBIIT . . . MENSIS AUGUSTI . ANŌ DNĪ . MILLMŌ . CCCXX PRIMO . QUOR̄. ANIMAB . PPICIĒT . DEUS.

1445. Thomas de Saint Quintin, Esquire, Harpham church, Yorkshire.

1450. John Gaynesford, Esquire, Crowhurst church, Surrey [h].

1458. Sir Robert Staunton, and Agnes his wife, Castle Donington church, Leicestershire. (Three plates.) In this example the knight is represented as wearing a vizored salade, having the vizor raised to display the countenance. The armour is highly characteristic of the important changes in defensive military appointments, which the altered nature of offensive weapons brought gradually into use. The most remarkable novelties here apparent are the pauldrons for the protection of the shoulders, and the enormous elbow-plates or coudières.

The effigy of the knight only is here given, as an example of plate-armour. This brass comprises two figures, those of Sir William Wadham and of his mother, each beneath a triple canopy, and the whole is surmounted by an embattled head canopy. Of the border-legend the following words only remain, SIMUL CUM WILLMŌ WADHAM FILIO EADEM QUE OBIIT . . . . DIE MENSIS . . . . ANNO DNĪ . MILLIMO CCCC . . . . ET QUI QUIDEM WILLIMŪS . . . . At the foot of the figures is an epitaph in rhyming Latin.

The costume of Lady Staunton is simple but elegant: she wears the mitred head-dress[i]. The children, in two groups, are placed at the feet of their parents.

The pinnacles of the canopy, with four shields of arms, are lost; a small portion of the border-legend also is now wanting.

1460. Sir Robert del Bothe and Dulcia his wife, Wilmslow church, Cheshire. The armour here exhibits a very decided change from that shewn in the previous examples. The adjustment of the knee-defences is very curious: the tuilles are much larger than heretofore: the pauldrons and coudières have an entirely new form, and the throat is encircled by a mentonière. The sword of the knight is girded in front of his person, crossing from right to left. There is no dagger; the head is bare; and so also are the hands.

The lady is habited in a kirtle and mantle, and her right hand is clasped in that of her husband. Her hair flows unconfined over her shoulders from beneath a fillet, which encircles her brows. The two effigies are placed above the embattled basement of a double canopy, now lost. The original composition was completed by a border-legend, and four shields of arms. Of these shields three remain, (one has been accidentally omitted in the engraving,) and they are severally charged with the arms of Bothe, Massey and Fitton[j]: the fourth shield was for Thornton. The inscription, when complete, was as follows:—

[i] See Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 90.

[j] Dulcia, the wife of Sir Robert del Bothe, was a Venables, a granddaughter, probably, of the heiress of the Fittons of Bolyn, who about A.D. 1370 married a Venables, when the elder branch of the Fittons of Bolyn became extinct. This may account for the introduction of the arms of Fitton into this brass.

c. 1460. Richard Quatremayns, Esquire, Sybil his wife, and their son, Thame church, Oxfordshire. (Two plates.) The arrangement of the effigies in this brass is very unusual: and the figure of the son is represented as but little smaller than the figures of his parents. The armour here represented is highly characteristic of the period; and at the same time it exemplifies a most extravagant variety of knightly panoply. The pauldrons which protect the shoulders differ from each other both in size and form: this is also the case with the extraordinary coudières. In front of the right shoulder is a moton: and the throat is encircled by a collar of mail, deeply indented at the edge. The father and son are represented as both similarly armed.

The lady wears the sideless cote-hardi over a kirtle, and a mantle: in the original the head is lost, but its outline is distinctly visible in the slab to which the brass is affixed. These effigies are placed upon an elaborately enriched altar-tomb, about the margin of which is the following chamfer-inscription in slightly raised letters:—

✠ O CERTEYN DETH THAT NOW HAST OŪTHROW

There were originally four shields of arms, one at each angle of the slab: of these one only now remains, and this still retains a portion of the original heraldic tinctures: it bears Barry of six, over all a bendlet, gu., impaling, quarterly, 1st and 4th, arg. a fesse, sa. between four dexter hands couped at the wrists, gu., for QUATREMAINE: 2nd and 3rd, two talbots, passant.

1462. Sir Thomas Grene and Matilda Throckmorton his wife, Greens' Norton church, Northamptonshire. This knight wears, over his steel breast-plate, a demi-placcate, and he has a lance-rest screwed upon the armour which covers his breast on the right side. The two pauldrons are not very dissimilar, and they are finished above by a serrated ridge, somewhat resembling the back-fin of a fish: this appears to be prototype of the passe-guarde of a later period. The coudières are large, and also serrated like the pauldrons. About the throat is a collar or mentonière of mail: the head and hands are bare; the former rests upon a tilting-helmet, now despoiled of its crest; the latter are clasped and uplifted, as in prayer. The figure below the waist is drawn in such a manner as to represent the knees as turned outwards: the joins of the armour inside the legs are, consequently, shewn: and the singularly formed genouillières with their back-plates, and also the tuilles, are seen in profile. The sollerets are still pointed. Between the tuilles appears the skirt of a haketon, and over this a baguette of mail. The sword is girded at the left side almost perpendicularly, by a narrow belt: and from this same belt a misericorde of unusual size is suspended in front of the person.

This effigy closes the series of illustrations of armour contained in this volume.

The lady is in a widow's habit; she wears a kirtle, a mantle, a flowing kerchief upon the head, and a barbe beneath the chin. Beneath the larger effigies were small figures of their four children; but these, which were severally labelled Thomas, ..., John, and Elizabeth, have all disappeared, except the last. Of four shields originally placed at the angles of the composition, two only remain: these bear GRENE impaling FERRARS, and GRENE and MABLETHORP quarterly. This fine and interesting brass was originally fixed upon an altar-tomb: but this is now destroyed, and the brass lies upon the pavement of the chancel.

The border-legend has been preserved, and it is as follows:—

BRASSES OF CIVILIANS AND LADIES.

See Monumental Brasses and Slabs, pp. 80 and 106: also the Oxford Manual, pp. xxxix, lxxiii, and xci.

At the head of the present series of brasses of this class, I have placed the memorials of two judges and one sergeant, learned in the law, which are severally preserved in the churches at Graveney in Kent, Milton in Cambridgeshire, and Gosfield in Essex.

1436. John Martyn, a judge of the King's Bench, and Anna his wife, Graveney church, Kent. This large and fine brass comprises the effigies of the judge and his lady beneath a rich double canopy. The judge is represented in his official robes, with a coif upon his head[l]; his feet rest upon a lion; and in his hands he holds a heart inscribed with the words IHŪ . MCY. The lady is habited in a kirtle under a mantle, and has the horned head-dress of the times: she was the daughter and heiress of John Boteler of Ewell Court, Esquire. She survived the judge, and also a second husband, Thomas Borgeys, Esquire, and died A.D. 1458[m]. In the spandrels of the canopy between the pinnacles and the finials, were four shields of arms; of these one only now remains, and bears the arms of Boteler, or Butler.

1553. Sir William Coke, judge of the King's Bench, and Alice his wife, Milton church, Cambridgeshire. The two principal figures in this brass are represented as partly turned towards each other. The judge, over the ordinary civic attire of the time, wears his robes; and the lady has the puffed and slashed sleeves, and the loose dress of the period of Queen Mary. Above the effigies is an achievement of arms, and below them are two groups of children, and a reversed inscription. The composition is completed by a border-legend with angle emblems[n].

It may be well here to mention that there are other fine brasses to judges yet preserved at Gunby in Lincolnshire, Baldwin Brightwell in Oxfordshire, Watford in Hertfordshire, Bray in Berkshire, and in the church of St. Mary Redcliffe at Bristol. Judge William de Lodynton, in his fine brass at Gunby, wears an anlace beneath his judicial robes.

[l] Judges were originally ecclesiastics, and they wore the coif to cover the tonsure.

[m] See Hasted's Kent, vol. ii. p. 705. Thomas Borgeys had a brass in the same church, and, indeed, its border-legend yet remains: he died A.D. 1452.

[n] At the foot of the engraving, this brass is incorrectly stated to be now lying on the pavement; it still rests upon its original low altar-tomb. Also in the engraving itself is an error; the omission, that is, of a scroll above the head of the lady corresponding with that which is above the head of her husband.

A.D.
1436. Thomas Rolf, Sergeant-at-law, Gosfield church, Essex. The habit of this learned sergeant closely resembles the academic costume of ecclesiastics worn in his times. He has on his head a coif, and from beneath his hood appear two small lappets or bands. The inscription is a remarkable example of the singular rhyming Latin in such repute in the middle ages.

c. 1360. A Lady, (unknown,) Great Berkhampstead church, Hertfordshire. A loose super-tunic, without any buttons, is the only outer garment represented in this simple yet highly effective effigy. Upon the head is a kerchief, which partly covers the reticulated head-gear. The singular lines upon the arms, introduced apparently as a species of shading, may be also observed in the brass of Richard and Beatrice de Heylesdone, at Hellesdon in Norfolk.

c. 1370. Blanche Bradstone (?), Winterbourne church, Gloucestershire. In this example the super-tunic, which is without buttons, has two pocket-holes in front of the figure, and through these is seen the cincture of the kirtle which was worn beneath. The closely-buttoned mitten-sleeves of the kirtle are also displayed, as is the case in the Berkhampstead brass[o]. The effigy of Blanche Bradstone was originally surmounted by a single canopy, which, with the border-legend, is now lost.

c. 1370. Maude Lady Cobham, Cobham church, Kent. The costume of this effigy is the sideless cote-hardi, buttoned [o] Pocket-holes of precisely the same form were used in the garments of the other sex at this period; as in the brass of Nicholas de Aumberdene, at Taplow in Buckinghamshire. See *Mon. down the front of the figure, and worn over a close-fitting tunic[p]. The skirt of the cote-hardi appears to be made open at the sides, in order to display the tunic: there is another example of this arrangement, at Ashford, also in Kent. The head-dress is reticulated[q].

1372. Ismena de Wynston, Necton church, Norfolk. An example of the long sleeve-lappets so commonly worn at the period.

1385. Margaret Lady de Cobham, Cobham church, Kent. This lady, who was wife to Sir John de Cobham, the founder of Cobham college, is habited in a kirtle and mantle, with a reticulated head-dress: the reticulations, it will be observed, are not continued down the sides of the face, as in the previous examples, but are renewed on the shoulders; this is a somewhat common arrangement. The head rests on two embroidered cushions, and the finial of the canopy is formed by a seated figure of the blessed Virgin with the holy Child.

1391. Margaret Lady Willoughby D' Eresby, Spilsby church, Lincolnshire. The costume here depicted is the tunic, sideless cote-hardi, and mantle; over the forehead is a bandeau of jewels, and the front of the reticulated head-dress is similarly enriched.

c. 1400. A Civilian (unknown) and his wife, Ore church, Sussex. The man wears a long loose tunic, with an anlace suspended from a broad and rich baudrick. The lady's tunic is buttoned throughout its entire length: her head-dress resembles that of Lady Margaret de Cobham.

c. 1400. A Wool-merchant (unknown) and his wife, Northleach church, Gloucestershire. This is a very fine and valuable brass: the merchant wears the customary long tunic, which in this instance is buttoned in front, and encircled at the waist by a richly embroidered belt, and to this is attached an anlace. Over the tunic is a mantle, with a capuchon, fastened by three large buttons on the right shoulder, probably an official robe; the feet rest upon a wool-pack. The tunic of the lady is made to set close to the face, and is fastened with buttons; over this is a mantle, and the head-dress is a long coverchef.

c. 1400. A Civilian (unknown) and his wife, Tilbrook church, Bedfordshire. Both husband and wife are here habited in loose tunics, which are buttoned up close to the face, and have very large sleeves. The male figure has a capuchon, and a large anlace.

1401. William Grevel and Marion his wife, Chipping Campden church, Gloucestershire. This truly noble brass must be regarded as a fitting memorial for the munificent rebuilder of the church within the walls of which he now lies buried, and who could be characterised as FLOS . MCATOR ' LANAR' TOCIVS ANGLIE, the flower of the wool-merchants of the whole realm of England. The double canopy which surmounts the effigies has a central shaft; and in the spandrels of the two heads of the canopy itself are foiled circles containing the merchant's mark, while above are four shields, all charged with the same armorial cognizance. The border-legend comprises two distinct and complete commemorative inscriptions.

1404. John Rede, Checkendon church, Oxfordshire.

1414. Philippa Byschoppesdon, Broughton church, Oxfordshire. The position of the four shields in this brass is very singular. The head-dress is a fine example of that species of coiffure denominated mitred or horned [r].

1416. Thomas Stokes, Esquire, Elena his wife, and their children, Ashby Ledgers church, Northamptonshire. The effigy of Thomas Stokes is here represented in civic attire, notwithstanding that he is described as ARMIGER. The upper compartment of the canopy originally contained the emblematical representation of the Holy Trinity [s]; or possibly this device may have denoted the two-fold nature of our blessed Lord.

1419. Margaret, wife of William Cheyne, Hever church, Kent. The costume of this effigy is a simple kirtle and mantle, with the mitred head-dress. The head rests upon two embroidered cushions, which are represented as supported by two angels with uplifted wings, and habited in the amice and alb [t].

c. 1425. Alice de Bryan, Acton church, Suffolk. The costume in this example denotes a widowed lady.

1425. William Chichele and Beatrice his wife, Higham Ferrers church, Northamptonshire, (two plates.) This is an example of singular merit and beauty; it is the memorial of a younger brother of the archbishop, a citizen and alderman of London, and his wife, a daughter of William Barrett, Esquire. The border-legend, when complete, was as follows:

[r] See Mon. Brasses and Slabs, p. 90.

[s] See the engraving of the brass to Robert Parys, at Hildersham in Cambridgeshire, in Waller's Brasses.

[t] A shield of arms has been accidentally omitted in the accompanying engraving of this brass; it is charged with a fesse nebulée between three crescents. A William Cheyne, Esquire, who died A.D. 1441, was buried in the church of the abbey of St. Mary, in the Isle of Sheppey.

1432. Nicholas Carew, Esquire, Isabel his wife, and Thomas their son. This fine brass consists of two effigies only, those of Nicholas and Isabel Carew, beneath a double canopy, a border-legend, and five shields of arms, of which one is now lost. The design of the canopy is unusual, the arches which rise above the heads of the effigies being placed in immediate connection with the embattled cresting. The shields of arms bear CAREW; CAREW impaling DELAMERE: and CAREW impaling gules, three Catherine wheels argent, for ROET (?). Of this Nicholas Carew the inscription records that SENEX ET PLENUS DIERUM IN PACE QUIEVIT: he was son to Nicholas Carew, Lord Keeper to Edward III., who died A.D. 1390, and was himself sheriff of Surrey and knight of the shire under Richard II.[x]

c. 1435. A lady of the Clopton family, Long Melford church, Suffolk.

1437. Robert Skerne and wife, Kingston-upon-Thames church, Surrey. This brass affords another admirable example of costume, and also of the peculiar form of commemorative inscription in use at the period: the figures are well drawn in the original, and carefully engraved. The lady was daughter of Alice Pierce, well known as the alleged mistress of Edward III. in his declining years[y].

1446. Joice Lady Tiptoft, Enfield church, Middlesex. (Two plates.) The effigy in this elaborate brass is represented as habited in a sideless cote-hardi, worn over a kirtle, and a mantle, the mantle being embroidered with the arms of Powis impaling Holland; the head-dress is of the mitred form, and is surmounted by a coronet. The inscription on the border-fillets is partly covered, but it is given in full by Gough, with the exception of a few words at the commencement, as follows: + ... DOMINA JOCOSA QUONDAM FILIA ET UNA HERĒD. CAROLI DN̄I. POWES AC ECIAM FILIA ET UNA HERĒD. HONORABILISSIME DN̄E. MARCHIE ET UXOR FAMOSISSIMO MILITI [JOHANNI TYPTOFT QUE OBIIT XX]II. DIE SEPTĒBR̄. A° DN̄I. M.CCCC.XLVI° CUIUS ANIME ET OMNIŪ. FIDELIŪ. DEFUNCTOR̄. IHS PRO SUA SACRATISSIMA PASSIONE MISEREAT. This lady was daughter to Edward Charlton, (in the foregoing inscription designated Caroli, domini Powes,) Lord Powys, who married Eleanor, widow of Roger Mortimer, earl of Marche, and daughter to Thomas Holland, earl of Kent; she was, at the time of her decease, forty-two years old: her husband, Sir John Tiptoft, was summoned to parliament as Baron Tiptoft and Powis, and having been in high reputation with Henry V. and Henry VI., he died A.D. 1442[z].

1464. Richard Wakehurst, Esquire, and Elizabeth his wife, Ardingly church, Sussex. The effigies in this brass, in accordance with the prevailing habit of the period, are represented as partly turned towards each other; the husband is attired in a loose gown, with a gypcière and rosary attached to his girdle; his shoes are very large, and round at the toes: the lady has the skirt of her ample tunic tucked up upon her left arm, and her head-dress is of the butterfly or wired form; she was daughter to Robert Echyngham, Esq.[a]

1470. Christina, wife of Matthew Phelip, Herne church, Kent. The attitude of this effigy differs from the previous examples, the uplifted hands being spread apart instead of clasped together; the costume is a kirtle and mantle, the latter of very ample dimensions, lined with fur, and secured in front of the person by a cordon, having a large slide and tassels; to the waist-cincture is attached a rosary: and the head-dress resembles that worn by Lady Staunton at Castle Donington[b]. The commemorative legend contains the unusual expression, QUE MIGRAVIT AB HAC VALLE MISERIE.

c. 1480. Jenkyn Smith, and Marion his wife, St. Mary's church, Bury St. Edmund's, Suffolk. The effigies in this brass appear in a kneeling attitude, with the hands held after the manner of the last example: the man originally wore a collar, apparently that of the house of York.

1482. Isabella, wife of William Cheyne, Esquire, Blickling church, Norfolk. The close-fitting sleeves of the period, with their large cuffs, are here exemplified. There is also worn a necklace of extravagant size, and the butterfly head-dress. The shield at the foot of the legend is charged with the arms of CHEYNE impaling BOLEYN, now much defaced. This lady was daughter to Geoffrey Boleyn, and great aunt to the unfortunate queen, Anne Boleyn[c].

c. 1375. Richard and Beatrice de Heylesdone, Hellesdon church, Norfolk.

MISCELLANEOUS BRASSES.

1463. A chalice, to William Langton, Rector, St. Michael's church, York. The inscription in this example, as in many others, is reversed, in consequence of the slab being placed immediately adjoining the eastern extremity of the church[d].

c. 1430. Brass to the memory of Walter Beauchamp, Checkendon church, Oxfordshire. This composition comprises a legend, with a shield of arms, and a symbolical representation of the translation of a departed spirit, expressed by the figures of two angels issuing from clouds, and bearing up a small undraped figure in a kind of sheet. In the monumental memorials of the middle ages this device may be frequently observed.

1448. Remains of a canopy, with two shields of arms; brass to Nicholas Dixon, Cheshunt church, Herts[e].

[d] See Monumental Brasses and Slabs, p. 122; and Christian Monuments, p. 111. In some instances the inscription is reversed, when the slab was placed at the foot of the altar-steps, as in the case of the brass of Sir John Bettesthorne at Mere, in Wiltshire.

[e] There is a long inscription in rhyming Latin on a plate, which yet remains, besides the head of the canopy.

King Richard II.:—This prince bore the arms of Edward the Confessor,—Az., a cross fleury between five martlets, or; impaling Franee (ancient) and England, quarterly, for England. This coat appears in the brass of Sir Symon de Felbrigge, K.G., upon a shield, and also upon a banner: upon a second shield this whole coat impales the arms of Anne of Bohemia, King Richard's consort,—Quarterly, first and fourth, ar., an eagle displayed, with two heads, sa., for Austria; second and third, gu., a lion rampant, queuè fourchée, ar., crowned, or, for Bohemia.

Roet:—See Carew.

[b] These coats are emblazoned from shields in the stained glass, yet preserved in Southacre church. In the brass the coats of arms are incorrectly placed on the kirtle of Lady Harsyck.

[c] It is not quite certain that the coat of arms upon this brass (to Sir John Lysle at Thruxton, Hants) is Heath, it may be Wakehurst, or possibly some other name.

Ros :—Or, three water-bougets, sa.

Rosale :—See Dagworth.

Saint Amand :—See Beauchamp.

Saint Quintin of Brandsburton :—Or, three chevronels, gu. ; a chief vaire, ar. and az.

Wells :—Or, a lion rampant queuè fourchée, sa.

Willoughby :—See Ufford.

Wingfield :—Ar., on a bend gu., cotised, sa., three pairs of wings, conjoined in leure, of the field.

Wylcotes :—Az., an eagle displayed, ar., armed and ungued, or. This same coat is quartered on another shield.

Zouch :—Gu., bezantée, a canton, or. (Impaled by Willoughby.)

The brass of Roger Elinebrygge, Esquire, at Bedington, Surrey, has also the following shields of arms :—Two chevronels, between three cinquefoils ; a label for difference. The same, impaling Elinebrygge : and, a griffin, segreant.

[d] This coat appears on the brass of Sir Thomas de Saint Quintin and Agnes his lady, at Harpham, Yorkshire : this Sir Thomas married Agnes, daughter of Robert Warren, lord of Newbiggin, &c. She died, A.D. 1418. In the engraving of the arms of Warren the bend only is represented.

The brass of Margaret, wife of William Cheyne, Esquire, at Hever, Kent, has a shield, (omitted in the engraving,) bearing,—a fesse nebulée, between three crescents.

The brass of Sir William de Bryene, at Seal, Kent, has Bryene, impaling,—Quarterly, first and fourth, a lion rampant; second and third, fretty.

The brass of John Cray, Esquire, at Chinnor, Oxfordshire, has a shield,—Chequy, on a chief a demi-lion rampant.

There are small shields on the pommels of the swords of Sir ... D'Eresby, at Spilsby, Lincolnshire, and of Sir John Lysle at Thruxton, Hants; the former is charged with a lion rampant, the latter with a cross.

CRESTS.

Brewys:—On a chapeau, gu., lined erm., a lion statant, ducally crowned, or.

Bryene:—On a chapeau, gu., lined erm., a bugle horn, or., tipped and garnished, sa., sans strings.

Coke, of Cambridgeshire:—On a wreath a wolf's head, per pale, gu. and or.

Dagworth:—On a wreath an eagle's head erased, or.

Elmebrygge:—On a wreath an eagle's head erased.

Ferrers of Chartley:—On a wreath a panache of peacock's feathers, proper.

Harsyck:—On a wreath a panache of turkey's feathers, sa., rising out of a hoop, or.

Stourton:—On a wreath a demi-friar, habited in russet, his head covered with his cowl, holding in his hands a scourge of three double lashes, knotted, all proper.

Tendering:—On a wreath a wing erect, or.

The brass in Dorchester Abbey church, Oxfordshire, which is here attributed to Sir John Segrave, has a crest, a Saracen's head; this crest, however, appears to be that of Drayton rather than of Segrave.

BADGES, BANNERS, AND COLLARS.

The White Hart, lodged; the badge of King Richard II.: and the fetterlock, repeated on two shields, in the brass of Sir Symon de Felbrigge, K.G., at Felbrigg, Norfolk.

The Garter, of the Order: brass of Sir Symon de Felbryge, K.G.

The Rose-en-soleil, the Yorkist badge: brass of Robert Langton, Queen's college, Oxford. (The badge is here represented upon the morse of the cope.)

The royal banner of King Richard II., charged with the arms of that sovereign: brass of Sir S. de Felbrigge, K.G.

The banner of Sir Hugh Halsham, charged with Halsham and Strabolgie, quarterly: brass of Sir H. Halsham, West Grinstead, Sussex.

The banner of Ralf Lord Stafford, charged with Stafford: compartment of brass of Sir Hugh Hastings, Elsyng, Norfolk.

The collar of SS. (Lancastrian) is represented in their brasses, as worn upon the effigies of Sir T. Massingberd and of Lady Massingberd, at Gunby, Lincolnshire; and of Sir J. Segrave (?) at Dorchester, Oxon. This collar also appears to have been represented in the brasses of Sir J. Wylcotes, Great Tew, Oxon; of Thomas Saint Quintin, Esquire, Harpham, York; and of John Leventhorpe, Esquire, Sawbridgeworth, Herts.

The Yorkist collar of suns and roses, with the white lion of the house of Marche as its pendant, appears to have been represented in the brass of Jenkyn Smith, at Bury St. Edmund's.

In the brass of Wm. Grevel, at Chipping Campden, Gloucestershire, two shields, each charged with a merchant's mark, are introduced into the composition.
